TRIAL

OF COLONEL A. BURR.

(Continued by adjournment and held at the Capitol in the Hall of the House of Delegates,) for High Treason against the U. States.

TUESDAY, August 13.

Present JOHN MARSHALL, chief Justice of the United States.

(Mr. Eaton's evidence concluded.)

Little more passed between col. Burr and myself relevant to this enquiry, whilst I remained at Washington, though he was solicitous to engage me in his western plans. I returned to Massachusetts; and thought no more of col. Burr or his projects until in October last a letter was put into my hands, from M. Belloap, to T. E. Danielson stating that boats were building on the Ohio. Mr. Burr. Have you that letter? Mr. E. No. Mr. B. It is improper then to state it. Mr. Hays. It is immaterial Mr. Belloap is here. Mr. E. As to letters, I have had no correspondence with col. Burr. I was about to state that I made a communication to the President of the United States through the hands of the Post-master general, stating the views of col. B.

Questioned by the Prosecution.

Mr. Wirt. Was there any conversation between you and the prisoner, in which you spoke of the odium attached to the name of warper? A. That conversation was excluded by the opinion of the court, as relating to the central project.

Mr. Hays. Did you mean to state that the honorable indemnity proposed to you by the prisoner was to be included in this plan? A. I understood it to be included in the permanent rank and emolument to be assigned me; in his full confidence, that he should erect a government of which he was to be the chief.

Cross-questioned.

Mr. Martin. Do you recollect when you arrived in Washington? A. I said, that I did not recollect particularly. But the principal parts of these conversations must have been between the middle of February and the latter end of March. Q. Was there any particular conduct calculated to put an end to col. Burr's impotencies? A. Yes. At some of our last interviews, I laid on his table, a paper containing this toast which I had given to the public: The United States—Palmy to the brain that should plot to dismember, and leprosy to the hand that will not draw to defend our union. Q. Where was that toast drunk? A. I cannot say. This question was made to me from authority. It was sent with other toasts I had corrected, to a paper at Springfield. I laid this paper on col. Burr's table, that he might see it; and I have reasons to believe that he did. Q. Was it drunk at any distant place? At Philadelphia? A. I do not recollect. I thought at first it was Philadelphia; but I had received many hospitalities throughout the union; many of my toasts were published; and in the hurry of passing and repassing, I have completely forgotten.

Mr. Burr. Do you recollect, when you left Washington? A. About the 5th or 6th of April. Q. Can you not be certain where this toast was drunk? At Washington or at Philadelphia? A. I am certain it was not at W. because I gave another there when called upon. Q. Did you say, that all those conversations happened between the middle of February and the last of March? A. No: I did not say so. I said the principal part of these conversations. Q. You say that this toast was printed at Springfield? A. I did. Q. Have you in your possession a paper containing that toast? A. I have not here. Q. You mentioned something about a communication which you made to the President through the P. M. General. Look at that paper. Is that your signature? A. It is; and I must give a short account of that paper. Mr. E. then mentioned that the notes on the two first pages were drawn up by Mr. Granger, from conversations which had passed between Mr. G. and a Mr. Ely, on certain communications made to Mr. Ely by Mr. Eaton, respecting Col. B's plans: that he had seen Mr. Ely at Northampton at the session of the court of common pleas, at a time when they had first heard of the building of boats on the Ohio. The notes on the last page, in Mr. Granger's writing, and subscribed by himself, were from subsequent conversations between him and Mr. G.

Mr. Burr. You spoke of accounts with the government. Did you or the government demand money? A. They had no demand on me. I demanded of them. Q. Did they state in account a balance against you? A. I expended money for the service of the U. S. when employed in my agency at Tunis; an account of which being presented to the accounting officers of the treasury, they, I was told, had no legal discretion to settle it. As there was no law to authorise this adjustment, I did refer to the Congress of 1803-4. A committee had reported on my claims, favorably as I had supposed. I repaired however to the coast of Barbary, and when I returned, found that new difficulties had occurred to an adjustment. Leaving out the sums which I had advanced, the government had a balance against me. The last session of Congress had provided for the payment and the commissioners have settled it.

Mr. Martin. What balance did you receive? A. That is my concern, sir.

Mr. Burr. What was the balance against you?

Mr. E. (To the court) is that a proper question, sir?

Mr. Burr. My object is manifest. I wish to show the bias which has existed on the mind of the witness.

Chief Justice saw no objections to the question.

Mr. E. I cannot say to a cent or a dollar: but I have received about 10,000 dollars.

Mr. Burr. When was the money received? A. About March last. Q. You mentioned Miranda. Where did you understand he was gone to? A. On the benevolent project of revolutionizing the Spanish provinces. Q. What part of them? A. Carraccas. I had some reason too to know something of that project, because I too was invited to join in that. He too was to have been a little emperor; he might have been troublesome to us; and of course when I asked you what was to be done with him, you observed, "hang him." Q. Did you understand I was to do all at once; to execute the central project too as well as those in the west? A. I have no objections to answering that; but it will be nothing in your favor. When col. B. was speaking of a central revolution, not much was said about his revolution in the west. Had the other been effected, I doubt much whether you would have been willing to have separated that part. Q. You spoke of a command. A. You stated, from the arrangements which you had made, that an army would be ready to appear when you went to the waters of the western country. I recollect particularly the name of Ephraim Kibby. You asked me about his spirit. You asserted that his brigade was ready to join you, and that the people also in that country were ready to co-operate. You spoke of your riflemen, your infantry, your cavalry. It was with the same view you mentioned to me that that man (pointing to gen. Wilkinson just behind him) was to have been the first to aid you; and from the same views you have perhaps mentioned me.

Mr. Martin objected to the witness interposing his own opinions in this manner.

Mr. Hays. Some allowance is to be made for the feelings of a man of honor.

Mr. Eaton bowing apologised to the court for the warmth of his manner.

Mr. Burr. You spoke of my revolutionizing the western states. A. Your line was to be the Alleghany mountain. You were certain about Kentucky and Tennessee; but expressed some doubts about Ohio; I well recollect that on account of the reason you gave; that they were too much of a plodding, industrious people to engage in your plans. Q. How was this business to be effected? A. I understood that your agents were in the western country; that the commander in chief was ready to co-operate with his army; and that these with the adventurers that would join you, would compel the states to a separation. Indeed you seemed to consider New Orleans as already yours and that from this point you would make conquests and consolidate your empire. Q. Was it after all this that you recommended me to an embassy? A. Yes; and because I thought it the only way to avert a civil war. Q. Did you communicate your recommendation to me? A. Yes; you seemed to assent to the proposition.

Q. What had become of your command? A. That I had disposed of myself.

Q. Did you understand that you had given me a definitive answer? A. No; after you had developed yourself, I determined to use you until I got every thing out of you; and on the principle that "when innocence is in danger, to break faith with a bad man is not fraud but virtue." Q. Did you think that your proposition as to a foreign embassy, which was so incompatible with my own plans, would be received by me with indifference; had I abandoned the project? A. You seemed to me to want some distinguished place: as to the mode, you were indifferent; and you seemed to acquiesce in the plan of a foreign embassy.

Mr. Hays. You said that you received about 10,000 dollars from the government. The act of congress did not give a definitive sum. A. The act of congress gave the accounting officers the power of settling with me, under the inspection of the secretary of state; under whose department I had served; and the settlement was accordingly made.

Late Foreign Intelligence.

WESTERN PRUSSIA.

Marienburg, June 9.

Particulars of the events which took place on the 4th and 5th of June, at the first corps of the grand army.

On the 4th of June, at three o'clock in the morning the enemy made demonstrations to attack Pettelkan and Zegern, by Braunsberg. Part of the ninth regiment moved accordingly to the point where he attempted to cross the river, and compelled him to retreat. A cannonade ensued from both banks of the river, from Zegern to Pettelkan, which lasted some hours, but produced no important result.

At eleven o'clock two columns of the enemy's troops were observed from the redoubt near Spanden, which advanced on the road of Mehlsach and Wermittu against the bridge head. Soon after, these two columns, estimated at three thousand foot each, supported by numerous cavalry, displayed, formed in front of the bridge head, and unmasked a battery of ten pieces of cannon, and two howitzers, which immediately commenced to play on our entrenchments. The fire was returned with great vigor, and after a conflict which lasted two hours the enemy was obliged to retreat both on the road of Mehlsach and Wermittu.

At three o'clock in the afternoon every thing was quiet along the line. On the 5th at four o'clock in the morning, the advanced posts reported that a brisk cannonade was heard on the right and soon after intelligence was received of a severe attack being made on the 4th and 5th corps. The first corps took up arms and prepared for any event which could happen. The prince of Ponte Corvo made the necessary dispositions for offensive operations, in order to make a diversion when once the fire ceased in the right wing.

General Frere, who commanded at the bridge head of Spanden, reported at nine o'clock, that two heads of columns were perceived on the road of Mehlsach and Wermittu. The enemy advanced with from 10 to 12,000 foot 3000 horse, & 20 pieces of ordnance, posted some battalions on the banks of the Passage on the right and left of the rete de pont, and his sharpshooters took post on the banks of that river, under cover of the woods which are on the right bank.

The prince of Ponte Corvo ordered thereupon six battalions to march from Newark to Deutschendorf, and directed at the same time general Gerard's brigade to advance from the camp at Corvenden, on the heights between Schlodien and Spanden. The 63d regiment received orders also to support Spanden. The four regiments of dragoons under marshal La. houssace, which joined soon after were distributed in that line. The 17th regiment was posted in such a manner as to be able on the enemy's first retrograde movement, to advance to the right bank. Whilst those dispositions were carried into execution, the prince passed the line on horseback, and approached Spanden, in order to ascertain the enemy's views. The road which leads from Schlodien to that village was rendered dangerous by the Russian sharpshooters who were posted on the right bank of the river, and seemed ready to attempt the passage. The prince ordered them to be dislodged from the woods they occupied by grape shot & howitzer shells; but unfortunately the pieces of ordnance, destined for that purpose did not arrive in due time. The prince had proceeded to the bridge head, and given his orders to general Frere. On his return he perceived the 17th regiment of dragoons taking a position under the fire of the Russian infantry. He was desirous to post it to a less dangerous place, but while he was approaching the regiment his serene highness was struck by a musket ball in the neck under the right ear; the confusion was so violent that he fell forward, with his head on the saddle. The troops for a moment were struck with dismay; they thought their general in chief was killed; but this painful error did not last long; the prince raised his head and employed his remaining strength to inspire the soldiers to avenge him. An exclamation of revenge was their answer, and the prince was endeavoring to avail himself of this favorable disposition of the troops when the blood streaming forth from his wound, and the weakness thereby occasioned compelled him to withdraw to a house and get his wound bound up. He therefore directed general Maison chief of the general staff, to convey his orders to the different generals, strenuously to maintain their positions.

The prince's absence did not last more than half an hour. His wound had been scarcely bound up, when he received a report that the enemy was attempting to cross the river near Bourden, and immediately proceeded, with the 27th regiment of dragoons, to the heights of Deutschendorf. Soon after general Lapiessie arrived at the head of three regiments and a battalion of light infantry, and marched to the river to attack all who should attempt to cross it. By the perseverance of these troops the enemy's design was frustrated; the prince thereupon received intelligence, that fresh troops of the enemy had made their appearance, and that the two first columns were advancing to carry the bridge head by assault. He ordered general Frere to hold out to the last extremity, and in case of need to cause himself to be buried, with the 26th regiment of light infantry, under the ruins of the redoubt. General Wellatie was at the same time directed to support general Frere, and to fall upon the enemy's flanks.

General Maison soon after reported to the prince, that the five Russian regiments had made an attempt to carry the bridge head by assault, but had been vigorously repulsed by the 27th regiment of light infantry, which kept its fire until the Russians were within musket shot. In consequence thereof the fire supported by grape shot, became so destructive, that the enemy was compelled to retreat in disorder. He was pursued by the 27th regiment of dragoons beyond Werpren. The surgeons say, that the prince would not take more than a fortnight or three weeks to cure, and that he soon will be able to appear again at the head of his corps.

BALTIMORE, August 26.

TRANSLATION.

Extract of a letter from Joseph Tonnard, esq. to his correspondent in this city, dated, consulate of the U. S. of America at Cadix, the 8th June, 1807.

SIR, Although I had long ago made up my mind not to waste my time nor my paper in announcing to the public the sentiments, as well moral as political, by which I have always been animated; yet, as it is true that men of real sense to the U. S. of America do not give credit to trifling reports, nor to impersonal injuries, more particularly when the libels are anonymous & the calumny of a mischievous tendency; and as I have to live but a short time in this world, and am in expectation of seeing the duties of this consulship discharged by another (when my merits only will shine) yet in justice to myself and to the public decorum, and from respect to my friends in that country, I think it just to summon my calumniator, let him be whom he will (notwithstanding I do really believe him not far distant from me, and that all he has published is false and of course unjust) to prove the contrary, and I will inflict upon him the chastisement that by law he deserves to suffer. In a few words, I will satisfy the public, and thereby remove disadvantageous impressions that my enemies have created against me with their malicious falsities.

In a letter sent from this place on the 15th December, 1806, and published, it was insinuated that at last, to satisfy the wishes of our worthy president; I had taken a house in this city, as if I had not had one before that time. It is well known and notorious, that since the year 1768, I have kept house in this city, living under the same roof with Mr. Francis D. Hegallux, with whom I had mercantile concerns until the year 1794, without becoming a bankrupt. In 1794, I took the house in San Alexander street, No. 78, owned by Don Juan Vico, which I quitted in 1797, and went to live in another in the same street, No. 178, owned by Don Francisco Alvarez Campaña, from which I removed last year, the 1st of October, to another in Aduana Vieja street, No. 2, belonging to Señores Palsu, as appears by the Mercantile Almanack of this city, shewing that during 39 years past my residence has been in this city, and that at the same time I have kept my own house at Rota since the year 1760. Rota is only eight miles distant from Cadix by sea, and by land through Puerto Soto Maria 12 miles; and from my house at Rota, I can see Cadix and its bay. I have also a view of the sea to the distance of 20 miles; so that if Rota was the place of my abode, it would be as well as Cadix, being a port belonging to my consular district. Although there are in Rota ferry boats going almost hourly to Cadix, I am constantly ready to go for my business, and to stay a certain part of the day in place for the benefit of my country without prejudice to my private affairs. I have a good idea that I am so falsely accused, and myself signing documents; and if I chide to the trouble and expense of a journey to my office, which I am so falsely accused, I also published in the year 1806, a declaration, I also published myself 50 miles from Cadix, which was intended only to be public.

In the same publication of the month of December 1806, in the very same paper, it was made a subject of complaint that Algeiras was entitled to be appointed at the interim Don Pedro fulfilling his duty as well as a man who has no salary, nor even American because the few going there are by any one who solicits are only to oblige me. I respect he has for me have represented to the government the beginning of this war, I representing to that place a confidence, nothing has been that can the ablest man do cargoes and masters of the property, provided they said to them, without this their attorney, or leaving me notwithstanding this, I have appeals to be entered off formation of it to Mr. Y. Madrid, and by so doing my duty; and as to the person the concerned have to defend their property to assistance of mine has through I have seen many fully conducted, and lost my judgment, yet I could not see these evils will continue is uncorrected. And I am convinced, that after a suit has commenced it is not an easy justice of it; and the man from taking notice of the authority from the owner himself responsible for it. Besides that, they expose themselves, as he is always they consult with after the harassed, I write this letter from came yesterday from Cadix to make to you this one re wish it should be said I care, nor that I come here out any other tidings, I you many years.

be fixed upon for summoning of the witnesses on the trial, if there was one at all, might materially depend upon the fate of the questions now before the court.

The Chief Justice observed that there was only one of these points which could affect him. There was no sort of question, considering the evidence adduced, that Mr. Bl. had been present on the island; and he was of course not interested in that point.

Mr. Martin. The question which affects him is, whether any evidence has been produced that there is any thing like an overt act of levying war. The arraignment was accordingly put off.

Mr. McRea hoped that the court when it adjourned would adjourn till Monday 12 o'clock; and assigned the importance of the questions now before it as a sufficient reason.

Chief Justice admitted that upon the fate of these questions, being decided in favor of the prisoner, would depend the fate of the prosecution. He was extremely willing to give all the time to the counsel for the prosecution which they might require for a consideration of these questions.

Mr. Martin observed that before they adjourned he would suggest new authorities on two points for the consideration of gentlemen: 1. That it was the right and duty of the court to decide, whether an overt act has been proved by two witnesses; 2. What authority extrajudicial opinions ought to have with the court. Mr. M. alluded to the opinion of the supreme court in the cases of Bollman and Swartwout, which has been relied on by the prosecution as authority, that the exertion of force is not essential to treason. The counsel for the prisoner contend it is not authority, because it was an extrajudicial opinion.

Yesterday the court met at 12, when Mr. McRea proceeded with the discussion before them: This day Mr. Wirt will resume the argument. It is not expected that the court will deliver their opinion before Friday or Saturday. We shall present a sketch of all the arguments, when they are concluded.

AMERICA & GREAT-BRITAIN.

The editor of the Boston Centinel, after having attentively perused his files of English newspapers, gives the following result on this subject, of his diligent enquiries:

On the great topic in controversy between the United States and Great-Britain, we have made diligent search and enquiry. We cannot find or learn any thing in the proceedings of the English government, or conduct of the English people, that does not bear the most pacific aspect towards this country. A war with us is deprecated by all orders of men, and every thing but the sacrifice of the national security, or prostration of the national honor would be conceded to preserve a good understanding. And we are assured from good authority, that all the treaty differences in dispute will be amicably and satisfactorily adjusted, if the government of the United States wishes a friendly adjustment. This disposition, we are assured, did not arise from any fear of the consequences of war; but from a desire to prolong the blessings of peace and good will.

The London Courier of June 13, contains the following:—It appeared by the entry in the books at Lloyd's on Thursday morning, that of fifty-two ships which had arrived, forty seven were American, and only five British!! We notice this circumstance in the hope that the public attention will still be directed to the resumption of the navigation and colonial system, as the only means by which this country can maintain its maritime superiority, and afford relief and encouragement to the West-India shipping interest.

A fact like the above, the Courier ought to have known, was no proof of the relative importance of the American navigation. The American vessels sail detachedly, while the British sail together under convoy. The next day an English convoy of 300 sail might have arrived, and not a single American. It is wrong to endeavor as some British editors do to render the people of Great-Britain particularly jealous of American Commerce. But if there should be found many more American than British merchantmen who arrive at English ports—is it at all to be ascribed to the relaxation of the "Navigation Act"? Is no diminution of ships occasioned by the war?—None by the exclusion of British vessels from nearly all the ports in Europe? No increase of American vessels in consequence of our almost exclusive peace and neutrality?

THE LAW-STUDENT'S ADIEU TO HIS MUSE.

When first I sought, my Muse, thy needful aid,
I sung in raptures of a charming maid,
Who long has reign'd the mistress of my heart,
And her I sung in strains devoid of art.
Then youthful fancy, unrestrained by rules,
And legal precepts drawn from learned schools
Took frequent flights; but now those flights
Are o'er,
My much-lov'd fair one I must sing no more.

Thou knowest well, how ill thou could'st agree
With Coke's dry strictures on 'Estate in Fee';
Quaint and pedantic, full of bar'rous terms,
Replete with tiresome and fictitious forms.
Even Blackstone's smother style would scarce go down,
With one ambitious Apollo's crown;
That catiff Richard Roe would sweep away
Poetic thoughts and quickly gain the day,
Or thou, my muse, wouldst drive him from thy sight,
And backward force him to the murky realms of night.

Yet law's the road to honor, wealth and fame;
At which aspiring mortals ever aim;
Law gives the power of aiding the distressed,
And forcing proud oppressors to be just—
Of curbing villains who thro' fear alone,
Obey those precepts which their hearts disown.

But ah! my muse, 'tis fixt by fates decree,
No jurisconsult can thy vot'ry be.
Since then I'm forc'd between the two to choose—
Renounce the law, or cease to invoke the muse—
I say with grief, 'Barnassian nymph adieu!
I cease to invoke thee, and the law pursue.'

New Invented Oven.

I HAVE obtained from the general government an exclusive privilege in an OVEN I have invented on entire new principles, for baking all kinds of bread, the advantages of any plan over those hitherto used are in the usual mode: The oven is first heated the fire scraped out and the dough put in to bake, when the oven is hottest and as the bread bakes the oven gradually cools, it will surely be conceded when bread is first put into an oven it is most tender and least capable of bearing heat—on my plan the bread is put into the oven at the extreme end, or where the heat is least and as it bakes it regularly progresses into a keener heat until baked. Again, it is acknowledged the thinner bread is baked the better it is and the longer it will keep; in the usual mode of baking the thicker bread the smaller quantity the oven will bake per day; on my plan as the oven is constantly blasted, the thinner bread the more the oven will bake; added to this the labor of splitting wood is saved—the heating, cleaning and setting an oven also. An oven on my plan if well built, is much more durable, takes up less room to do the same business, costs much less money to build it, requires less fuel to bake the same quantity of bread, fewer hands can do the same business, in fact, a mind (superior to prejudices often attendant on customs long established) will be satisfied on a view of my oven in operation. I have narrated facts only for those who have not an opportunity of seeing the oven in operation.

I subjoin the certificates of gentlemen whose respectability will not be questioned. For an oven of twenty feet length and three feet six inches width, or the privilege of using it, my price is five hundred dollars, and in proportion for a larger or smaller one. I will dispose of my privilege for states, counties, or towns, on liberal terms, letters addressed to me post paid, Dumfries, Virginia, will be duly attended to.

James Deneale.

Dumfries, July 26.

WE, Richard and Stephen Winchester, residing in the town of Fredericksburg and commonwealth of Virginia, do certify, we have built an Oven under the immediate direction of James Deneale of Dumfries and commonwealth of Virginia aforesaid, on a plan entirely different from the ovens in common use, and we believe invented by the said Deneale. It requires much less fuel than the common oven and may be used without splitting the wood, of course there is great saving of labor; we have baked every kind of biscuit and can say truly that it bakes well. We consider it as a valuable improvement and well worthy the attention of bakers.

R & S. Winchester.

Fredericksburg, January 23, 1806.

These are to certify to all whom it may concern, that I, Andrew Jamieson, biscuit baker, in the town of Alexandria, and district of Columbia, was in the town of Fredericksburg, in the state of Virginia, some time since the middle of last January, and there did attend great part of one day to see the operation of biscuit baking in the new invented oven in the possession of Messrs. Richard and Stephen Winchester, of Fredericksburg, which oven I have every reason to believe is the sole invention of Mr. James Deneale, of Dumfries, in the state of Virginia, and hereby declare and aver, that I saw said New Invented or Perpetual Oven bake large and small biscuits in as short a time and as regular a manner as any oven I have seen these forty years I have been at the baking business. Given under my hand this sixth day of February (in Alexandria and district of Columbia) in the year one thousand eight hundred and six.

Andrew Jamieson.

N. B. Not having sufficient experience of said oven above mentioned, I cannot ascertain what may be saved in wood or labor, only that cord wood will do without the labor of chopping and splitting, as is necessary with old fashioned ovens.

A. J.

New York, December 1, 1806.

THIS is to certify that I have been using the patent oven, invented by James Deneale, esq. of Dumfries, Virginia, since April last, to considerable advantage in this city. I have no doubt of its possessing considerable advantages over the old method, such as a saving of fuel and labor, in consequence of which the proprietor is enabled to make the bread much thinner and consequently more proper for long voyages on a hot climate.

Again, as a part of the operation requiring most skill and practice is abridged by this method, more of the work may be done by boys or men little experienced in the business.

Not being acquainted myself with the old method, I will not attempt to state the differences between them, but that it is greatly in favor of Deneale's method must be evident to the most superficial observer.

Iron Works for Sale.

THE subscriber is duly empowered to contract for the sale of a handsome Site for Iron Works and eight thousand acres of Land adjoining, lying on the river Rappahannock, about nine miles above Fredericksburg. This tract abounds with inexhaustible mines of the richest iron ore and an ample supply of wood for coal. The site for the works are advantageous in the extreme, commanding the whole course of the Rappahannock by a natural canal, into which the whole force of the river may be turned at a small expense. There has been a furnace and other works formerly erected here, and the ore found on trial abundant and good. When it is considered that this property is within nine miles of tide water, and that the navigation from the site of the works to tide water may at a small expense be rendered practicable to transport every heavy article to market; when it is considered from the contiguity of these works to the seat of government, no iron establishment can supply cannon and shot on so good terms (competent judges having pronounced the ore on this tract of superior quality for cannon) a doubt cannot be entertained of the great value of this property. The title is indisputable, and a great bargain may be had. The subscriber will at any time attend those inclined to view the premises, and can shew an accurate survey of the tract on application to him at Dumfries, in Virginia.

This tract is situated in a thickly settled part of that county, and contiguous to the main road leading from Randolph to the horse shoe bottom, on Clinch river.

One other tract, named Fertility, of 800 acres, in Westmoreland county, state of Pennsylvania; situated on the Monongahela river, and binding thereon for 3-4 of a mile, about one quarter of a mile below Casner's ferry, and 4 miles above Purkinson's ferry. A large proportion is rich bottom land, with a valuable orchard of sugar trees and about 60 acres in cultivation. The main road from Union-Town to Pittsburg passes close by this tract.

Any part of the above described property, we are disposed to sell at reasonable rates, and the following terms, viz. One fifth in hand, and the residue in three or four equal annual payments, the purchaser giving bonds with security on the premises.
